How Quickly They Forget

Here we go again. It's time for Democrats and the media to get all warm and fuzzy over the so-called signs of a Democrat victory in November. They're running TV ads before Labor Day! They're energized! They're unified! Polls show them ahead! And - gasp! - some Republicans are voting for the Democrat! How quickly they forget.

2006: Democrats are on TV before Labor Day. (Akron Beacon Journal)

2004: Democrats outspent Republicans on TV before Labor Day: Kerry and pro-Democratic groups have spent $15,993,252 on Ohio ads between March 3 and August 15, while Bush and pro-GOP organizations spent $12,403,892 over the same period, according to TNS Media Intelligence/CMAG. (All eyes on Ohio, Greg Botelho, CNN, 8/31/04)

2006: Strickland leads in the polls with three months to go. (Dispatch)

2004: Kerry led in the polls with three months to go: A CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll conducted in Ohio from Aug. 13-15 of 2004 showed a 10-point lead, giving Kerry "52 percent support to Bush's 42 percent." (All eyes on Ohio, Greg Botelho, CNN, 8/31/04)

2006: Democrats are more unified than ever. (ODP)

2004: Democrats were more unified than ever: 'I've been involved in politics a long time,' Johnnie Maier, the Stark County Democratic Party chairman, said at party headquarters in Canton. 'Up till this year, I never used words 'Democratic' and 'unity' in the same sentence. But Bush has unified us beyond my wildest expectations.' (Ralph Z. Hallow, The Washington Times, 10/28/04)

2006: Strickland's talking about his faith. (Toledo Blade)

2004: Kerry talked about his faith: 'The fact that Senator Kerry is a person of faith is something that might help voters who are undecided,' McCurry said. Kerry has been explaining it more in recent weeks as he campaigns in socially conservative areas like rural Ohio.

2006: Democrats think there's no way they can lose on Election Day.

2004: Democrats lost.
